

Point/Expectation Comparison Chart

We recommend talking with your PBIS team before deciding about your point/expectation type. While choosing a point/expectation type is required now, you CAN change it once you are logged into PBIS Rewards.

	Points Only 1-10	Expectations with 1-Point Scale	Expectations with 3-Point Scale
Advantages	Fewer mouse clicks to award points so speeds up process of awarding points. Simplest tracking of points	Reports clearly show where success is happening with respect to values/expectations which can help you see where work is needed Clear distinction on recognizing when a student demonstrates a value/expectation	Teacher can recognize partial compliance with value/expectation Reports clearly show where success is happening with respect to value/expectation
Disadvantages	No view into how behaviors align with school values/expectations	More thinking required to determine awarding of points More mouse clicks to award as compared to Points-Only Lack of subjectivity in determining if student demonstrated a value/expectation ...cannot recognize partial compliance with a value/expectation	The most thinking and decision making required when awarding points More mouse clicks to award as compared to Points-Only
Why Would You Choose This?	This can be a great fit for a school that is very early in the rollout of PBIS. It also may fit better for schools that want to do many frequent recognitions since there is fewer mouse clicks and less thinking necessary.	You want to recognize behavior by value/expectation, but want to keep it simple.	You want to recognize behavior by value/expectation, but want to give teachers the ability to award on a scale so that students are more likely to receive some points as opposed to no points.

*You can have up to 7 expectations.

Helpful tip: Each school awards points in their own unique way. You'll have to decide which option is best for your school, staff, students, and PBIS initiative. None of our schools are alike. Which is why we have 3 different options to choose from. The chart is just information that we have gathered from speaking with schools using PBIS Rewards over the years.
